

PROOF OF TRAVEL INSURANCE COVERAGE

Manulife has advised of the following:

Certain countries, including some popular travel destinations for Canadians, now require all visitors to prove they have out-of-country travel health insurance when arriving at the country's borders. Without proof, travelers may be required to purchase insurance for the duration of their stay.

If you are planning a trip, you're encouraged to check to see if proof of travel health insurance is required by the country you are visiting. If proof is required, you can click HERE for a copy of a general letter that confirms you have travel insurance coverage available through your group benefits plan. You should carry that letter and your emergency travel assistance card when traveling to countries where proof is required.

If you are traveling with your dependants, a letter that names each dependant and confirms their coverage is available to you by calling Manulife's Customer Service Centre.

Does your destination require proof? You can visit these websites to investigate whether your destination requires proof of out-of-country travel health insurance.

Travelers are required to meet the terms, conditions and eligibility requirements of their travel insurance policy in order for their coverage to be in effect. The requirement to purchase additional coverage does not void or cancel the existing coverage from Manulife.

Manulife Financial is not responsible for the requirement of any country for you to purchase additional insurance beyond that provided by your group benefits plan.
